

Balance

Reaching balance is an interesting challenge but I have never thought about it seriously.

On a holiday night when I was looking into the depths of darkness and thought about the future, my gaze was focused on the stones and I moved involuntarily towards them.

Darkness of the night and the play of light on stones invited me for what I needed, a game; Stacking stones on top of each other to test the balance.

So, I tried to build a column. I failed a few times and the column did not rise as it should have but I tried to look more carefully for the right stones and simply saw the balance was struck.

It wasn't difficult anymore because the answer was hidden in my powers; thinking and searching to find the right way to choose the best stones for making what I intended to.

Later, I looked at it from different directions. The Column could have gone further to be higher, and I could enjoy more by this challenge and my powers, "Insight," Searching and thinking. Maybe the future is really as beautiful as this challenge, maintaining the balance that is in our powers and a sense of well-being.

Parsa Zarrabi

Instagram: @parsa_66691

All content is ©Copyright of the artist named above and reproduced for Disabled Artists' Network CIC with their permission.

